To Whom It May Concern:

Ms. Brittany Tincher was a pre-student teacher in my fifth grade classroom at Eberwhite Elementary in Ann Arbor, Michigan during the winter of 2013. She spent approximately a day and a half in my room each week and focused on practicing language arts concepts she was concurrently studying in her university work. Some of her responsibilities included helping as needed during any subject, working in small groups to teach literature concepts, and working one-on-one with a student to practice reading assessment. In this capacity, she got to know the whole class and shared in the ownership of their learning.

I observed many excellent teaching qualities in Ms. Tincher during her time in my classroom. She was mature, poised, and exhibited confidence in front of the students. She was well organized and would inform me both in writing and in person well in advance of assignments she needed to complete. The students responded to her with enthusiasm and were engaged when working with her.

I understand Ms. Tincher is a teaching intern currently and will be graduating at the end of the semester and looking for a teaching position. From my experience working with Ms. Tincher, I happily recommend her for this and wish her the best of luck in her career.

Sincerely,

Susan Haines
